When it comes to cars, we at Audi believe there are as many preferences in color and upholstery as there are people. As much as we'd like to offer infinite permutations and combinations, we are able to offer the next best thing: a carefully, even scientifically, selected choice of paints and fabrics. The fact is, considerable research and development is devoted to composing the spectrum of hues and tones that adorn the exterior of our automobiles as well as the textures and treatments that dress up our cabins.

The result: On the outside, a palette of triple-coat pearlescents, metallics flecked with aluminum chips and multi-colored micas that can appear different in changing light, including two new variations—Opal Mica and Amarena Mica—featured on the 1991 Audi V8 Quattro. And all applied during our 27-step paint and finishing process, providing corrosion resistance, protective sealants and multi-layered coatings that distinguish how Audis look and how Audis last. On the inside, where color-conscious meets comfort-conscious, materials that look good and wear well: high-grade velour, fine-grained leather and now boldly styled "Quattro" script cloth offered on the 1991 Audi 80 and 90 Quattros. Decisions, decisions...choosing an Audi was easy. Deciding what it will wear is a bit tougher.
